Tehran leftist rally challenges Khomeini

Tens of thousands of Marxist People's Fedaycen Friday presented Khomeini with one of his toughest challenges since he be-came nominal head of the successful Iranian revolution by demanding faster, more radical

The challenge was flung at a well disciplined rally on the campus of Tehran University. a frequent staging area for bloody street protests that eventually led to the end of the Pahlavi dynasty.

Uonamed speakers harangued the crowd — consisting mostly of youths — with antiimperialistic rhetoric and a call to Khomeini to permit free-dom of speech and public gatherings. It was a reference to Khomeini's banning of a Fedayeen procession on Thursday for fear it might crupt into a bloody confrontation with Khomeini followers.

Some unrest was reported in provincial areas. State radio said that "anti-revolutionary doubtful ele-ments" in Kurdistan, northwest Iran, were planning to march on military barracks in the cities of Sagaz, Baneh and Marivan, io order to seize weapons. The radio said the army had been alerted and soldiers ordered to resist any attacks. The report, however, did not disclose if the "elements" were Kurds campaigning for an independent Kurdistan,

A member of Khomeini's People's Militia said by phone from Mariyan that "no distur bances took place in the city Friday."

The Marxist group wants Khomeini to return lands to the farmers, grant free electricity to rural areas and offer interest free loans to peasants. The Fedayeen played a prominent role in ousting the 59-year-old Shah and have cooceded that Khomeini enjoys the support of most Iranians while they have the backing of many members of the working class. What they are deeply concerned over is Khomeioi snubbing them in the aftermath of victory and seck to play a more decisive role in forming a new Iraniao society

LONDON, Feb. 23 (AP) -Scotland and Wales vote March I on home rule plans that some politicians say could lead to the eventual breakup of the Uni-ted Kingdom or, if they fail to pass, bring down Britain's Labor government.

Scottish and Welsh Nationalists welcome the referendums, but cynics argue they will produce no more than glorified "talking shops" masquerading as parliaments, possessing the shadow rather than the substance of power.

"Why go on about a potty little administrative change?" Welsh Labor politician Leo Abse asks. "All it will do is to create a 'Welsh elite' in the civil service." Abse opposes are set up - and polisters are be limited:

For the referendums to pass, the law says nearly 40 per cent of registered voters must vote "yes," If the turnout is less than that, then the gov-ernment would ask Parliament to repeat the 40 per cent pro-vision. Prime Minister James Callaghan has warned this would delay home rule for the Scots and Welsh for years.

Rejection of the home rule plans would endanger Callaghan's minnrity government. It has only eight months of its five-year term left and its grip on power oow depends larger ly on the support of 13 Scottish and three Welsh Nationalists who are counting on Labor to fulfil its 1974 election promise

Carter warns against seeing world turmoil as U.S. defeat

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (AP) - President Jimmy Carter has said that Americans must resist the temptation to see all change and turmoil in the world "as a loss for us or 2 victory for them."

Carter, in a brief speech Thursday to newspaper editors... from outside Washington, offered his opinion in what he termed a "national debate" ahout America's role in a complex and changing world.

He said the United States will increasingly be faced with forces of change, such as those that have swept Iran, which it will be powerless to stop.

"Change itself is not the enemy Our concern is twofold. We must work to danspen conflict and maintain peace And we must make clear that it is dangerous for outside powers to try to exploit for their own selfish benefits this inevitable turmoil." he

Carter pledged, on the other, hand, that throughout the world. "We will stand by our. friends, we will honor our commitments, and we will protect' the vital interests of the United States " He added he would ha willing to commit American froops to do so.

He cautioned "that we must be very rlear about where our dependent and able to develop according to their own designs, free from outside interference either hy his or any other power In Southeast Asia ... our interest is to promote and not to become embroited in conflict among Asian Communist nations."

"We face a twifight world of change and sometimes of turmoit. We will increasingly he called upon to deal with events that do not represent basic challenges to our security but still require the responsible use of American influence and power," Carter concluded.

Carter said the United States has used all of its influence, to no avail, to bring about withdrawals by Vietnam and China from the territories they have occupied in the twn wars raging in Indochina

CAMP DAVID II

The second round of the Camp David talks is not expected to bring about the breakthrough that the three parties are looking for. At least not what Egypt and the United States want. Israel knows exactly what it wants and is not going to budge unless the United States brings enormous pressure to bear on il, which is highly unlikely. Egypt is now committed to a clear-cut link between a separate peace treaty with Israel and the future status of the West Bank, not to mention Jerusalem and the Golan Heights and now the Israeli occupation of parts of southern Lebanon.

Israel is adamant in maintaining its occupation of the Arab territories. After all, this was the whole idea behind the 1967 war in which Israel captured the three coveted territories around it—the Golan in Syria, Sinai and Gaza in Egypt and the West Bank including Jerusalem.

But as the situation stands, the American government is in no position to risk an all-out conflict with Israel, not while President Carter is hoping to be re-elected in 1980. It is well known that the American government and some in Congress are scarcely convinced that the Camp David accords are the panacea for the region's ills. They have been rejected by all the other Arab states, in varying degrees of vehemence. Most of Carter's edvisors, and nearly all Middle Eastern specialists as the State Department appear unconvinced that even if the accords are signed, there will be peace once more in the Middie East. Only a comprehensive peace formula, acceptable to the key Arah states and the PLO will stand a chance of implementation assuming that Israel will accept it, sign it and abide by it.

Thus the prospects of a Camp David breakthrough are bleak, and they may go on to a third and fourth round without achieving anything of substance. Unless the basics of the Middle East issue are tackled and solve!, no amount of bilateral negotiations under the auspices of the U.S. will measureably advance the cause of peace in the region.

A COURT INQUIRY

When there is so much dictatorship around the world, summary trials and sham courts to carry out the wishes of those in power, the Indian courts look rather bizarre in the uniqueness of their independence, fairness and fearless behavior This was exemplified recently by a decision of the Chief Justice of India. Chandrachud to iovestigate corruption charges against the family members of Prime Minister Morarii Desai, notably his controversial son Kantilal. Home Minister H.M. Patel told the Rajya Sabha, the upper house which is fashioned after the House of Lords in the U.K., that the government will order an official inquiry if the chief justice decides there are grounds for criminal proceedings. The family of Deputy Prime Minister Charan Singh are also to be investigated for corruption charges.

But, unfortunately, the inquiry is to he confined to the period which followed Desai's premiership, that is since March 1977 although reports and rumors of his son's misdemeanors have been rampant for many years. Kantilal is 52 and his father has been in public service for over 50 years. But this is up to the Indian courts to decide. Suffice it to say that the Indian judiciary remains one of the country's greatest resources in addition to its democratic traditions such as parliament and press. Indians, rich and poor, can be confident that the law exists to protect and uphold the principles by which they have chosen to live, work and be governed.

Granted, there is widespread corruption in public life and words like black money are standard phrases in the business jargon of the country. Abuse of power is as common a practice in India as in other countries. But the fact that even the prime minister's son can be taken to court and investigated for corruption publicly and possibly found guilty and punished, is sufficient to reassure the mass of population that no one will be free from retribution if convicted.

Energy crunch ahead

By Ann Pelham WASHINGTON-

The shrinking supply world oil is almost certain be felt hy most Americans in the next few months.

Gasoline and fuel oil will cost more if Iran doesn't restore production by summer. and, experts predict that's doubtful.

Even before Iranian oil stopped flowing, gasoline prices were expected to jump 9 to 12 cents a gallon by 1981.

The oil shortages also could produce long lines at gas stations, bans on weekend gas sales and downtown restrictions.

If the cutoff remains through June, the drain on U.S. oil supplies would be equivalent to the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo. according to Energy Secretary James Schlesinger.

The Carter administration says voluntary conservation could avoid these problems because Iran provided only 5 per cent of U.S. supplies.

But the public has been skeptical of past calls for conservation. Without a drop in demand, policy-makers concede privately, mandatory conservation measures will probably be needed by summer.

Otherwise there could be fuel shortages and higher home heating costs next winter.

That's because tight world sup plies would force companies to borrow from inventories to meet the summer demand for gasoline. Normally oil companies build up inventories during warm-weather months. Looming in the background is the Carter administration's "last resort" weapon-gas raings; Nobody seems to want rationing. Administration officials fear the system would he unmanagerble and take months; to get working They say rationing won't be needed unless oil supplies are cut by 10 to 12

Nevertheless, the government has about 4.8 hillion ration coupons stored Colorado, ready to go even though officials insist they probably won't be used. coupons were printed hastily during the 1973-74 embargo and don't have serial numbers which makes them easy to counterfeit.

In 1975, Congress ordered energy agencies to propare federal standby measures for future emengencies. Congress is still waiting but the plans now are promised before the end of February.

When the plans finally arrive, Congress will have 60 days to approve or reject them. If the administration wanted to actually start rationing, Congress would have 15 days to veto that move.

The still-secret standy plans are expected to include: *Bans on weekend gasoline

*Downtown parking restrictions, including control of spaces available in private lots; *Limits on thermostats in commercial and public build-leading oil exporter, supplied 10 per cent of the oil used by non-communist countries, from 5 million to 5.5 million barrels a day.

Part of that lose is being made up by increased produc-· practice that will eventually squeeze future supplies.

Government energy officials say loss of Iranian oil by itself won't cause major problems in the United States. But they acknowledge that trouble lies ahead if other producing nations cut back output and the United States is required under existing international agreements to share its oil supply with friendly nations, such as Japan, hard hit hy the Iranian oil cutoff

For the moment, however, officials are mostly concerned that the public will in effect, panie. The public can create a crisis almost overnight," said Deputy Energy Secretary John F. O'Leary, if people begin such practices as filling up gas tanks that are only half empty. -- (Congressional

The romance of India's Fatehpur Sikri

By Rosalind Ingrams
FATEHPUR SIKRI—India
is full of deserted, romanic palaces, but of them all, Fatehpur Sikri is one of the most romantic. It was built in the sixteenth century by Akbar. the great Moghul Emperor. It was the Moghuls who introduced Islam to India. No expense was spared on the construction and adornment of the new city, but after only 14 years of occupation it was abandoned. Hardly damaged by the centuries of disuse, Fatehpur Sikri today stands ghostly along its fow fulltop.

The story goes that Akbar was much disturbed by his failure to produce an heir. Although the Emperor was only 26 years old, there was no guarantee of continuity for royal houses in those uncertain times other than a strong that a new palace and town be built at Sikri, henceforth

in 1571 the hundreds of skilled craftsmen attendant upon Akbar's household were set to work. They produced a great mosque and the elaborate series of courtyards and build ings which make up the extensive palace.

Nothing now remains of the outer town, but the palace comprised a small-town within itself, Government offices were part of the structure. There were quarters for all sorts of officials, and there were also workshops for the royal painters. The illuminations and miniatures produced for the Moghul rulers are rightly famous: It was at Fatehpur Sikri that an organized team of painters was first brought together.

it was here too that Akbar first commissioned detailed records to be kept, not only of important deeds and conquests and laws, but also of the humblest and most trivial business of the palace. Historians have been delighted to learn of the Regulations for oiling Camels and injecting Oil into their Nostrils, Or, in a record of all the thousands of inhabitants ble floor. Mullahs reading the of the household, this vivid description of a holy man -"who has for 30 years in an unnoticed corner been gather ing happiness on an old mat."

Akbar also held his famous religious disputations at Fatch pur Sikri. He would invite representatives of different religious persuasions, including even Portuguese Jesuits from Gna, to sit and dispute in his presence. This was a gesture of great imagination, but the Emperor was distressed to find that the sessions proved to be all too literally disputes, rather than calm and lofty discussions.

But while all this teeming palace life can now only be brought to life by the imagination, there continues today at Fatehpur Sikni a very real life, and that is the life of the

The great Friday Mosque is, like the palace which it ad-joins, built of the local red saodstone. This stone is iocidentally in some ways an unfortunate material, at least to European eyes. The effect it produces is all too like that of dark red brick, synonymous with a certaio heavy style of nineteenth century architecture. However, the ooble and vast space of the inner courtyard produces a lightening effect, while the central abiutions pool, with a great shady tree beside, further adorns the site.

The jewel of the mosque is the carved white marble tomb of the tody Sheikh Salim Chishei. This tovely building, whose white marble facing and decoration were contributed by Akbar's grandson, Shah Jehan, stands free within the courtyard. A constant stream of pilgrims flows in and out of it. A trio of drummer singers was established there at the time of this writer's visit. Under the deen eaves a series of fine marble fretwork screens surrounds the tomb within the building. The tomb itself is yellow and shiny by the touch of the faithful fingers of 400 years. Flowers are scattered on it and the surrounding marHoly Quran are in constant attendance

The streetcars of San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO. -

Ever since horse-drawn trolles crisscoussed the streets of San Francisco in the 1850s. this city has enjoyed a love affair with streetcars.

Before World War II, the entire city was covered by a network of streetcar lines.

So when other major cities, such as Los Angeles, began in the post-war period to abandon streetcars in favor of diesel-powered buses and private automobiles. San Francisco stubbornly clung to its colorful. electrically powered trollies.

Pressure from planners who said streetcars were inflexible for a mushrooming population made some inroads and many of the city's streetcar lines subsequently were converted to bus roules.

But a basic streetcar network was retained - five lines converging onto one of the country's best known thoroughfares -- Market Street, where the sight of streetcars rumbling to and from the Ferry Building became almost as much as part of the San Francison scene as Chinatown and the Golden Gate Bridge.

Now, however, that is about to change. The San Francisco streetcar system is soon to enter the space age, with sleek -and expensive - light rail vehicles that can zip along at speeds up to 50 mph in a subway that runs the length of Market Street from the Emharcadero to Twin Peaks.

Eventually, the San Francis- BART upted on its own for co Municipal Railway will re- two stuh-ends with crossover place all 115 of its existing, tracks. and aging, streetcars with the smart new cars at a cost of $36 cars will have to wait for in-

Tests made on the cars in Boston, the only other city that has bought them, showed they have a tendency to derail and have unreliable doors and costly maintenance and propulsion problems - all bugs that San Francisco officials have been assured are being worked out.

San Francisco has taken deivery on seven of the 100 hidine them underground. cars it has on order and hopes to begin operations on at least one of the city's five lines by mid-summer. But Rioo Bei. manager of the municipal railways transk improvement program, is making no promises.

"I'm not going to give you snow job and say everything's going to be great," he said. "We've still got some things to iron out."

One of the major problems Be and his colleagues must deal with is a public relations

Recent reports here indicare that the new cars will run less frequently than the old ones because of turnaround problems at the foot of Market Street, which, in turn, might necessitate another excavation of Lower Market Street to build a loop. The estimated cost is more than $20 million.

And that's not a welcome prospect for San Franciscans who for years contended with a ripped-up Market Street while the BART (Bay Area Rapid Transit) system was under construction.

It actually was BART, which operates trains through a tube from O into the city, that built the twosulway under Market. double decking it so streetcars could one day use the upper level and BART trains the OWET

When San Francisco voters in 1969 approved a $24 million bond issue for the beautification of Market Street, it was the beginning of the end for the old streetcar system. Implicit in that vote was a desire to move the streetcars underground.

A critic of the new system. travel agent Maurice H. Klebolt. said he is a firm believer in exposing transit systems to the community, not

"This is a beautiful city and people who live here enjoy the sights of the city." he said. "A part of their commute is looking at San Francisco."

Kleholt, who heads a citizen's advisory panel to the Board of Supervisors on transit improvement, predicted that hecause of all the potential problems with the new cars and the subway, the system will be a mess and the only way it can be untangled is by lets of money.

Progress, however, will have its way, and 86-year-old James J. O'Brien, who retired as a streetcar conductor here to 1957 and recently took a lest ride on one of the new cars, predicted that it's going to be great - the only thing is the seate are a little hard.

Only eight American cities still operate streetcars - San Francisco. Boston. New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Newark and El Paso, and the system in El Paso, is temporarily out of service.

Around the turn of the century private entrepreneurs owned the San Francisco streetcar lines. Adolph Sutro, for instance, built his own line in the 1890s from downtown to his world-femed Sutro baths and museum near the Cliff House

Phil Parkes became the most expensive goalkeeper in British scorer there Thursday when he was transferred from English League First Division club Queen's Park Rangers to Second Division West Ham for a fee of about 500,000 pounds ($1 million).

The fee was nearly double the record figure Nottingham Forest paid Stoke for goalkeeper Peter Shifton two years ago. It was also the second bughest deal between two British chubs, beaten only by the one million pounds ($2 million) move by Trevor Francis from Birmingham to Forest earlier this month.

Parkes, 27, cost 15,00 pounds ($30,000) when he moved from Walsall nine years ago. Since then he has made appearances for Queen's Park Rangers and earned one full England international cap, against Portugal in 1974.

West Ham was relegated from the First Division last season but is now fourth in promotion chase with games in hand over the teams

CIA agents fired, reprimanded under new security regulations

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (AP) - Tighter security measures aimed at preventing leaks of classified materials have resulted in about a dozen recent dismissals or reprimands, the Central Intelligence Agency says. "Yes, there has been more security in the past six months or so." Public Affairs Officer Herbert Hetu said Thursday night. He acknowledged there were more frequent polygraph tests and a new policy of searching employees' briefcases and purses at the doors of the CIA's hig Virginia headquarters near Wash-

Senate unit links ties with Peking to Taiwan safety

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23 (AP) - The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimous approval Thursday of a Taiwan security bill which declares that continued U.S. recognition of the Peking government depends upon a peace. ful approach by China toward

The committee accepted compromise wording which declares that a threatened attack by the mainland against Taiwan would be "of grave concern to the United States."

The issue is expected to stir a fresh fight when the China bill reaches the floor of the

He indicated the new measures were at least partly connected to the case of William Kampries, a former CIA employee convicted in December of selling a top-secret satellite plan to the Soviet Union.

Hetu would not give details or exact numbers, but said fewer than 10 employees were reprimanded under new measures aimed at finding possible security violators.

The "New York Times" reported Friday that the measures also had contributed to a wave of voluntary departures at the CLA "armid renewed reports that morale there had Hetu agreed that retirements rose last year at the CIA and that as many as 200 middle and senior-level officials chose early retirement last month.

But he said the bunching of retirements in January occurred because of government rules making that timing financially advantageous and not that morale was low at CIA. "We're not going to close up shop," he said

CIA retirements last year last month's retirees are counted in 1978 figures under the federal computation system totaled about 90 more than in 1977, an increase of 15 percent to 20 percent, he said. The agency keeps secret the total number of people it employs.

"I'm sure that among those 90 there were some who had some resentment about various things, but you'd have that anywhere," be said.

Hetu said the retirements were not unexpected and were for good reasons," one of which was what he called the "end of a generation at CIA."
